Dear Labor:

I am currently retired and I depend on IRA distributions for part of my retirement income. Those distributions are for the most part earned via option related trades that I have routinely performed in my IRA accounts. This proposed rule change will cause irreparable damage to my ability to maintain the distributions that I depend upon.

With the Federal Reserve's ZIRP and QE policies, I find stock market investment strategies to be much too risky and thus if I am deprived of this option derived income, my standard of living will be significantly impaired.

Please DO NOT prohibit the use of options in IRA accounts.

Sincerely,

Mr. Roger Verhelst
